According to Dr. Coren, there are three main types of dog intelligence:

- Instinctive intelligence is the ability to perform tasks that are natural to the dog's breed. For example, a hunting dog may have a strong instinctive intelligence for tracking prey.

- Adaptive intelligence is the ability to learn new things and solve problems. For example, a dog may learn how to open a door or play a game of fetch.
- Working intelligence is the ability to follow commands and work with humans. For example, a service dog may be trained to perform a variety of tasks, such as guiding a blind person or detecting seizures.

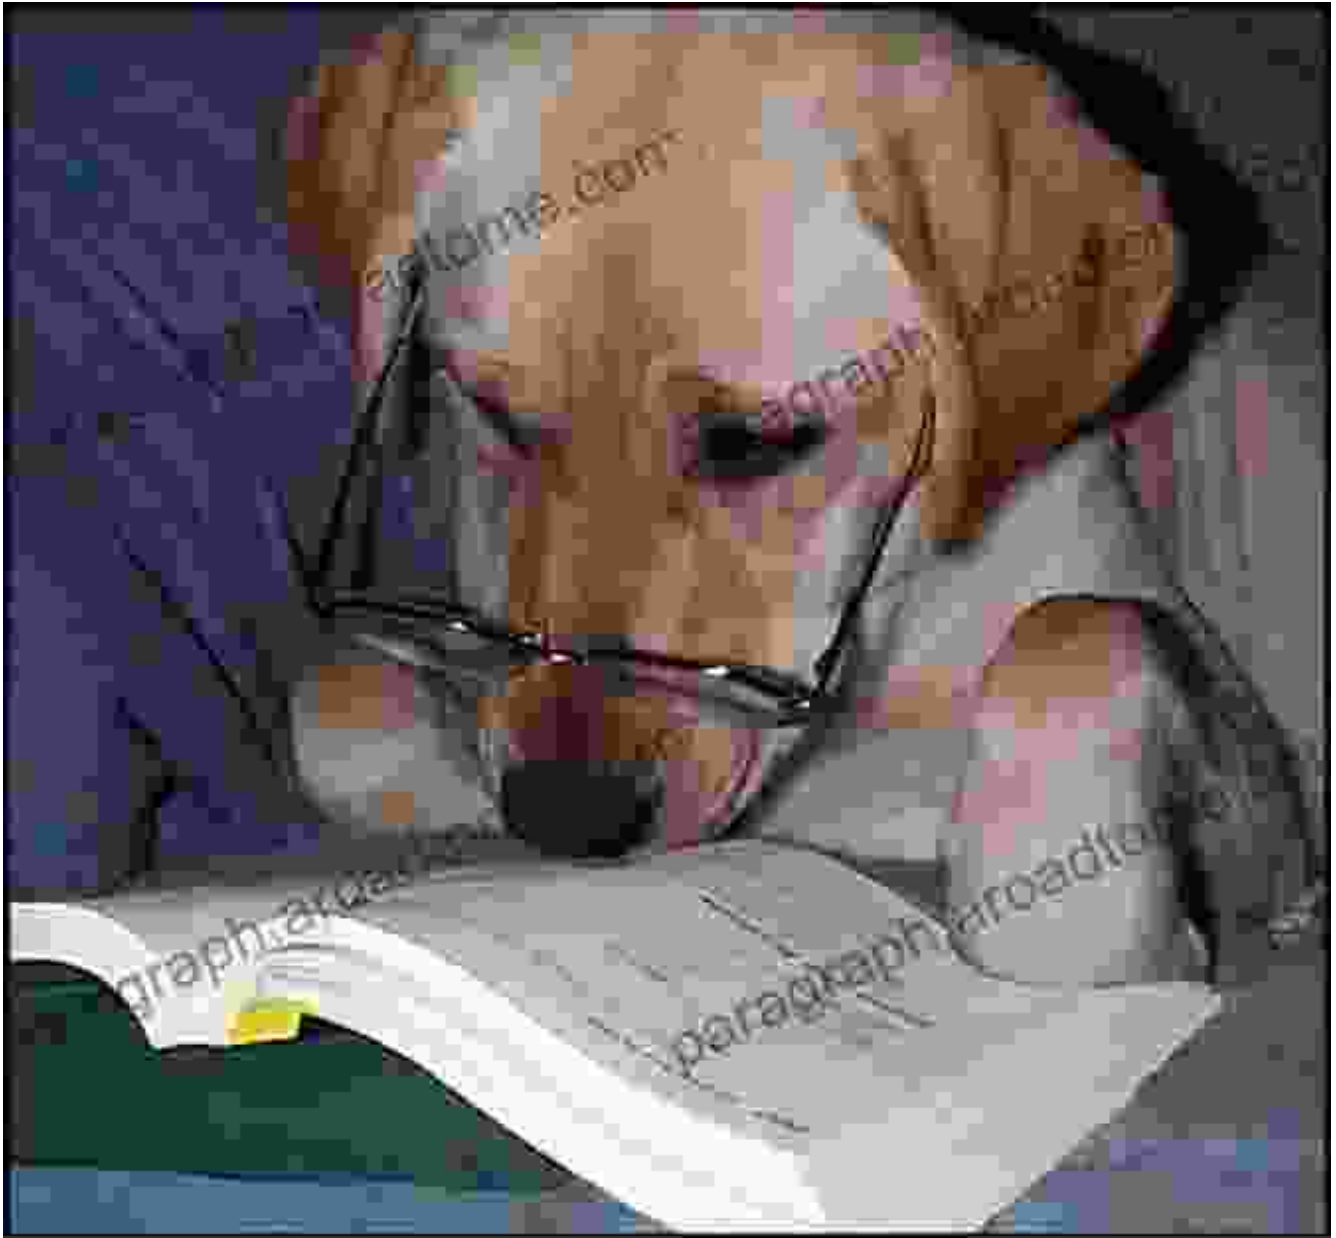

Dr. Coren also discusses the importance of environmental enrichment for dogs. He argues that dogs need to be mentally and physically stimulated in Free Download to be happy and healthy. This means providing them with plenty of opportunities to play, explore, and learn.
