On April 18, 1942, 16 B-25 bombers took off from the aircraft carrier USS Hornet on a daring mission to bomb Tokyo and other Japanese cities. The raid was led by Lieutenant Colonel Jimmy Doolittle, and it was the first time that American aircraft had struck at the heart of the Japanese Empire. The raid was a success, and it helped to boost American morale after the attack on Pearl Harbor.

The Doolittle Raid was a complex and dangerous mission. The B-25 bombers were not designed for long-range missions, and they had to be modified to carry the necessary fuel and bombs. The pilots also had to train for the mission in secret, and they had to be prepared to fly over long distances without being detected by the Japanese. Despite the risks, the Doolittle Raid was a success. The bombers reached their targets and dropped their bombs, and they all returned safely to their base. The raid was a major blow to Japanese morale, and it helped to turn the tide of the war in the Pacific.
