Meet the Enigmatic Protagonist: Elise Landon

A Symphony of Complex Characters and Intertwined Destinies

Instructions:

- Write a C program to create an array of characters of size 6. Populate the array with letters using a function named `populateArray`. Display the contents of the array using another function named `displayArray`. Print only the vowels in the array using a function named `printVowels`.

Hint:

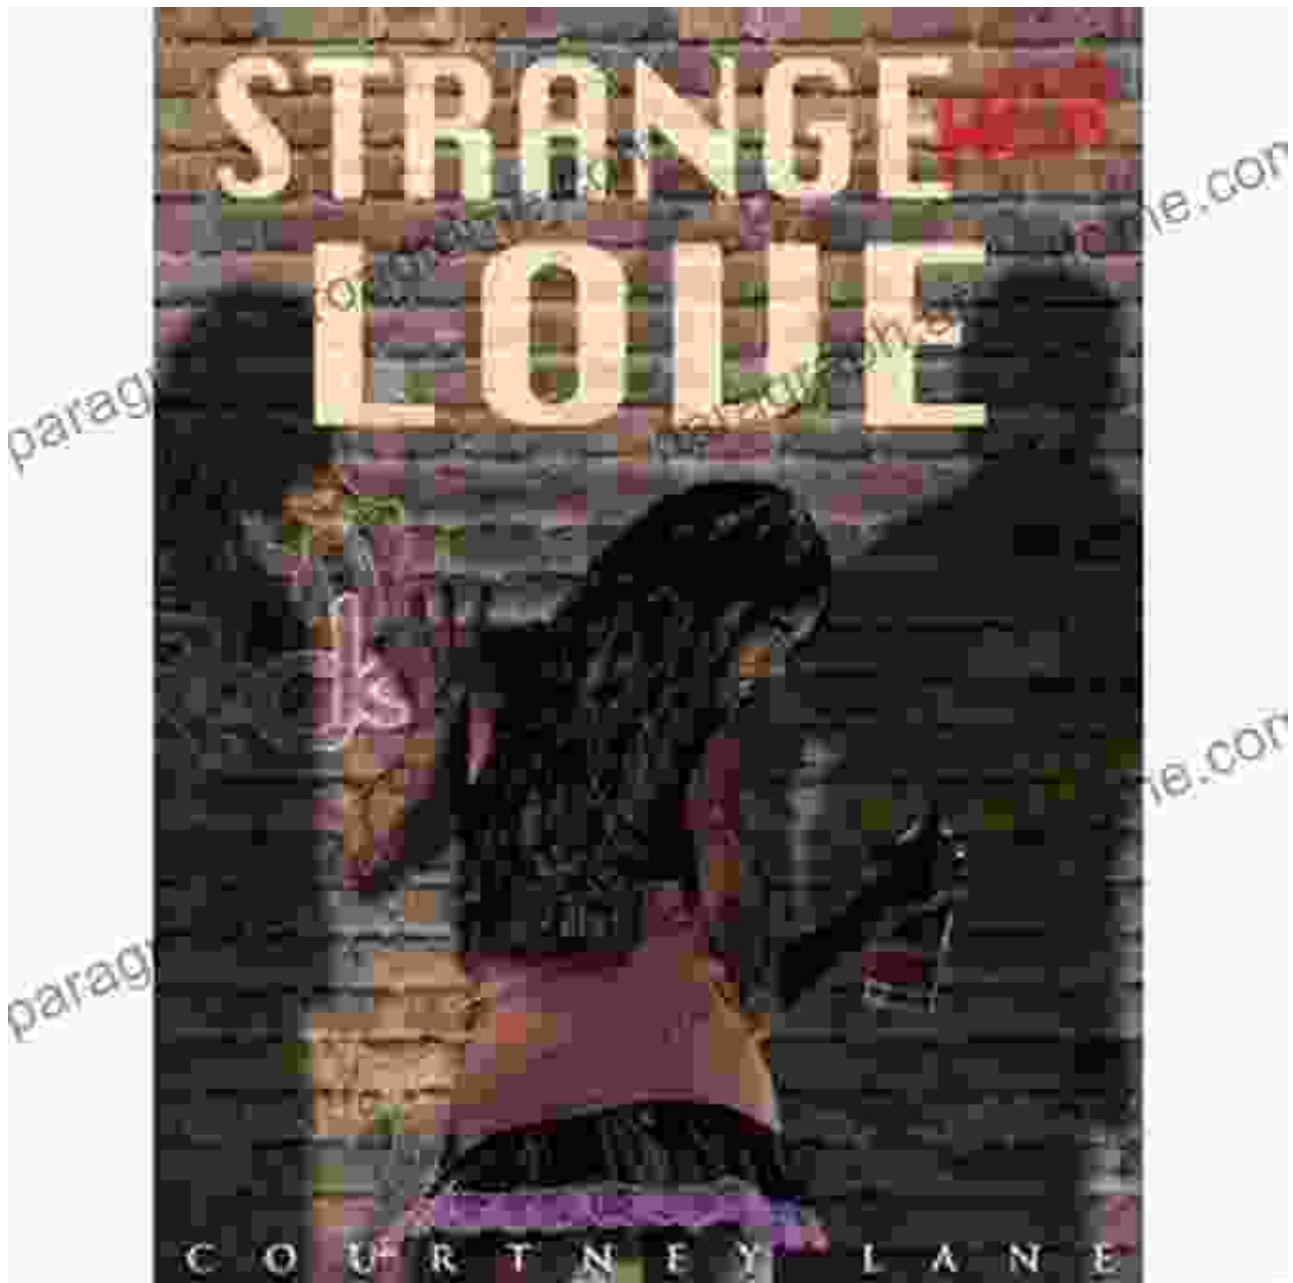

- Use `scanf` to read user input for each array element. To identify vowels, use an `if` statement to check against 'A', 'a', 'E', 'e', 'I', etc.

Hint 2:

- Alternatively look up the `ctype.h` functions. There are many useful functions that may appear in Lab Exams. Ex. the `islower()` function checks whether a character is lowercase – `islower('E')` would return 0 (false). That true or false result can be used in an `if` statement. Remember to `#include <ctype.h>`.

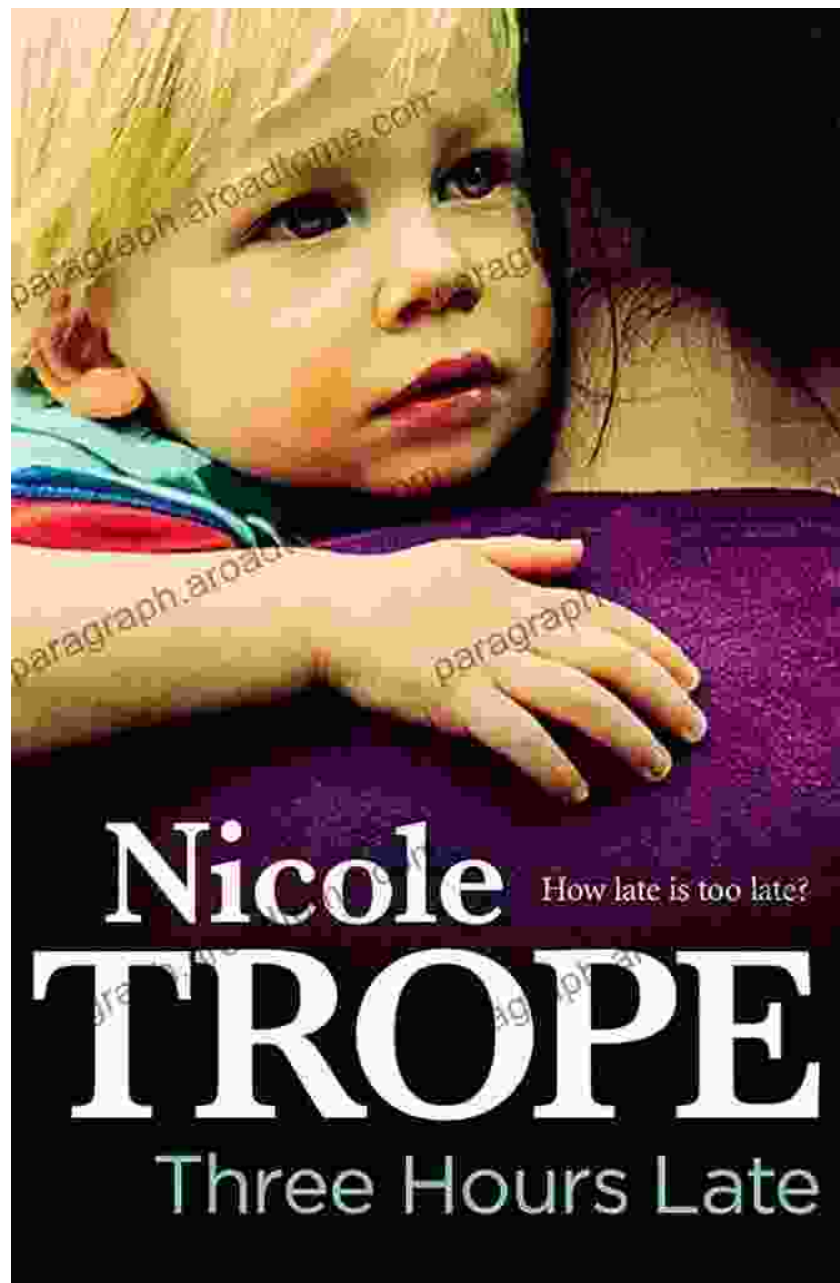

Nicole Trope masterfully weaves a tapestry of complex characters whose lives intertwine in unexpected ways. From the enigmatic Detective Hayes to the alluring Dr. Julian, each individual possesses their own secrets, motivations, and hidden connections that gradually unravel throughout the story. As the lines between friend and foe blur, Elise must decipher the truth from a captivating cast that keeps you guessing until the very end.
